Alec Ryrie, FBA, is a historian of Protestant Christianity in general and of religion in early modern England and Scotland in particular. He has written extensively on the English Reformation and the history and impact of Protestantism in England and Scotland and across the globe.

He has spoken on the cultural, social, political and emotional history of religion and on other subjects, including faith and doubt; martyrdom, violence and religious warfare; magic and deception; moderation and radicalism; childhood religious experience; and liturgy and prayer, formal and informal. Professor Ryrie is also a reader (lay minister) in the Church of England.

His well-received and most recent book is entitled Unbelievers: An Emotional History of Doubt. His popular online lectures on various religious topics have garnered tens of thousands of views. Professor Ryrie's recent work examines the history of the expansion of Protestantism into Asia.
